Tornado and twister are different names for the same type of storm a violent column of air over land associated with a severe thunderstorm. Tornadoes range in size from a few feet to over 650 feet across. They can move as fast as 100 mph. Tornadoes are often preceded by a dark, heavy cloud. They are often accompanied by a loud roar or rumbling sound, similar to a train or a low flying airplane. Tornadoes are most common in the central United States, but they can occur anywhere.
